

Shifting the way we think: Language as a complex, dynamic system
Diane Larsen-Freeman, University of Michigan
February 14, 2008

Conceiving of language as a complex, dynamic system, rather than one governed by a fixed set of invariant rules, challenges not only our theoretical commitments in linguistics and applied linguistics, but also the way that we manage language teaching and learning.